The Online 1RAE Model

A few years ago, many people would have turned their nose up at the idea of meeting a partner on the internet. However, things are different now. Modern society actively encourages online dating and has done a lot to reduce the negative stigmas attached to using online dating sites or apps. In fact, it has now reached the point where online dating is pretty much the norm when it comes to meeting someone new.

However, with popularity comes competition. And to beat the competition, you need to this one thing:

Stand out from the crowd.

And the Online Dating Playbook (ODP) is built to help you do just that.

Build on top of the core IRAE Model that you (should) already be familiar with, think of the ODP as your trusty Shogun Method optimized for use in an online dating environment. It requires several tweaks to the standard IRAE process, but you can expect the same great results as if you have used the Shogun Method on your target, face-to-face.

Texting vs Online Dating

Applying Shogun Method techniques over text message is something we have covered extensively inside the Texting On Steroids program. There are some texting strategies that you can already incorporate into your online dating game, and they will work tremendously well when you use them when you're sending messages online.

There is, however, one crucial difference you need to be aware of.

In most cases, if you're executing the IRAE Model on a target via a series of text messages, there's a high possibility that you already know the person you're texting. She might be a colleague, a classmate, a friend of a friend, someone you first bumped into earlier the same day, etc.

So, if you've been following the standard Shogun Method procedure, then there's some level of Intrigue in her already. And so, you're texting her to build on the "foundational" Intrigue before you escalate to the Rapport stage.

However, in the world of online dating, there's a 99% chance that the woman you're messaging is someone entirely new. This is where the major differences between the texting IRAE Model and the online IRAE Model come into play.

The ODP will lay out the extensive foundations of using the Shogun Method in an online dating platform. Many of the techniques will be used for the same purposes as they are in the standard IRAE process, and as such, they will be familiar to you. Nonetheless, many of them will need to be adapted to retain their potency online. The ODP will show you how and where these adaptations are made.

When you're messaging a woman online (or over text), you're essentially operating in a "handicapped" environment.

Why? Because you'll be unable to deploy techniques which require her physical presence like anchoring, conditioning, body language calibration, etc. These techniques are crucial especially for the latter stages of the IRAE Model, and as such, you'll need to increasingly compensate for these shortcomings as you escalate with your target.

The Online IRAE Model

Inside the Texting On Steroids 2.0 program, you have learned the most important aspect of communicating with your target via text:

You cannot execute the full IRAE Model through texting alone.

Similarly, this holds true for online dating:

You cannot execute the full IRAE Model through online messaging alone.

There are no exceptions to this rule at all. If you want to run through right up until Enslavement, you must utilize face-to-face contact. For one, you can't perform the Black Rose Sequence without her being in front of you.

In a "handicapped" environment, it can be difficult (if not downright impossible) to employ the necessary body language and microsignals along with your scripts if you're not right there with the person. Likewise, online communication won't allow you to read your target's non-verbal signals and therefore calibrate your position in the IRAE process.

Before we jump into the finer details, let's take a quick recap of each stage of the IRAE Model:

- Intrigue – This is the first and most important step of the seduction process. Intrigue is the act of capturing and retaining your target's attention to allow you to execute the hypnotic process in full. Intrigue is the stage which lays the foundations for later manipulation, meaning it's crucial that you do this well. In the confines of online dating, Intrigue is even more important as it is during face-to-face interaction.

- Rapport – With enough Intrigue, Rapport will naturally develop. This is the stage at which the connection between you and your target will gradually increase, furthering their hypnotic trance. This is the stage at which online messaging should transition into meeting up in person, allowing you to execute the final two stages more effectively.

- Attraction – At this point, your target will begin to feel an intense emotional connection to you, which you will then exploit to your advantage. You cannot successfully arrive at this stage if you're still messaging your target online and nothing else. Attraction needs to be done in person.

- Enslavement - The final stage, of the "end game" of Shogun Method. Enslavement ensures that your target is emotionally dependant on you in every way possible.

For now, I want you to forget about the final two stages (Attraction and Enslavement). When it comes to online messaging, these stages cannot be executed successfully without face-to-face interaction, so for the moment, we're going to focus on the first two stages only.

(Don't worry, we'll address Attraction and Enslavement later in the program.)

Here's another reason we're going to focus on Intrigue and Rapport stages alone –

With online dating, you can successfully complete these two stages with as much efficiency as you could. However, as the intensity of the hypnotic effect takes place in your target (as you escalate from Rapport to Attract), your efficiency will suffer since you're not there in person.

For example, Intrigue can be successfully completed via online messaging with identical effects as though you performed it in person. Rapport loses a little in the way of effectiveness but is still more than capable of providing a successful bond between you and your target. Then, there is a significant drop in effectiveness when the Attraction stage arises, followed by near zero effectiveness in the Enslavement stage.

Always Remember Your End Point

It is important to always keep your End Point in mind. In many cases, your End Point will either be a relationship, a hookup partner, or any variation of the two. Therefore, to reach this stage, you must arrange to meet your target in the flesh.

In the context of Shogun Method:

The primary goal of online dating is to build enough foundational Rapport to successfully get her to meet you face-to-face (so that you can then bring her to the End Point).

Correspondingly, set your expectations appropriately:

1. You can go "heavy" on online dating during Intrigue and Rapport stages, with the Contextual Rapport problem in mind (more on this later).

2. Online dating won't see you through to the Attraction stage fully, nor will it lead you into the Enslavement stage. (Very important.)

3. You can't put a woman through the Black Rose by sending her online messages.

Here's the good news, however…

While Shogun Method works entirely on its own, empirical evidence from ShogunMethod.net case studies is conclusive:

When combined with the Online Dating Playbook and Texting On Steroids, Shogun Method's effectiveness gets multiplied.

This shouldn't surprise you. After all, by "hitting" her from all sides (face-to-face, text, online), you'll in fact be getting her to fractionate from the multiple modes of communication.

Online Game Danger #1: Contextual Rapport

You should already come across the notion of "Contextual Rapport" inside the core Shogun Method program. Briefly, this is the point at which you and your target become familiar rather than forcing her to see you as her perfect partner.

Excessive Contextual Rapport inevitably leads to the friend zone[1].

And you know what? Nowhere is the danger of Contextual Rapport more prevalent than in the world of online dating. Yes, it's even worse than text messaging. It's true.

The reason?

[1] The Contextual Rapport problem is addressed comprehensively inside Dark Rapport.

Well, when you're texting a woman who you have already met in person, she is able to visualize you. She can see your mannerisms, your body language, and your demeanor. She will be able to hear your voice in her head, hear your inflections and your vocal tonalities. She already has a baseline to paint a picture of you, and this will go in your favor.

However, when you send a woman an online message, all you are to her is words on a screen. She will make a judgment about you very quickly (as you learned in the "Hot and Cold" segment of the core Shogun Method program) and if there is anything about you which doesn't fit her criteria, she will discard you instantly.

Harsh, right?

Well, you haven't seen the worst of it. When you progress to the Rapport stage, there are further hazards to be cautious of. When natural conversation is in full flow, it's very easy to let the online dating platform become your context. You just become the guy she talks to online.

Online Game Danger #2: Forced Familiarity

Likewise, it's very easy to accidentally force familiarity [2] during the Rapport stage, especially when discussing your mutual interests.

Later, we will look at the correct things to say during Rapport to avoid the "Forced Familiarity" problem rearing its head. For now, however, remember this general rule: you want to avoid simply agreeing with her.

Online Game Danger #3: Intense Competition

If the problems of "Contextual Rapport" and "Forced Familiarity" weren't enough, consider this fact:

You're competing with thousands of other men on the same platform.

At least when you're in a social environment, your competition is limited only to the other guys in the room at that time. (Or, if you're fighting another man for your woman's love, you're doing just that – fighting one man.)

[2] Forced Familiarity is a sticking point addressed in the Rapport module of the core Shogun Method program.

However, when it comes to online dating, imagine that you're in the busiest club in the world. There could be upwards of 5,000 people in your city that you're competing with for the attention of your chosen target.

This ties back to our assertion above – the main purpose of online dating is to progress to a face-to-face environment once you've grabbed their attention. The sooner you remove yourself (and her) from the online dating context, the more advantages you will have.

Online Game Danger #4: Precondition #2 Violations

Many people see social media as a giant online dating hub. Indeed, social media allows you to interact with pretty much anyone you want, and I often see clueless men setting up their social media pages as though they were a dating profile.

And you know what? This is one of the worst mistakes you can ever make. There is a massive difference between social media profiles and online dating profiles. Confusing the two won't do you any favors at all.

Quick revision of the super important Precondition #2[3] from the core Shogun Method program:

You must always conceal your intentions until your manipulation is complete.

This means that your target can't know you're carrying out the process of bagging her until the process itself is in full swing. Naturally, online dating profiles negate this entirely by their very nature (which we will come to in a second), however, social media accounts are the perfect way to advertise yourself and not violate this precondition.

Therefore, if your Facebook page comes across like you're trying to pick up women, all this is going to do is turn potential targets away. Advertise yourself, of course, but keep it covert. Social media isn't a platform where potential partners are expecting to be targeted, therefore, their guard will immediately go up if your intentions are clear.

[3] See here for the full list of Preconditions: http://shogunmethod.net/shogun-method/module-1/

By contrast, one of the advantages and disadvantages of online dating is that everyone on there is fully expecting to be targeted by a potential partner. Therefore, Precondition #2 becomes a little more complex than it does in face-to-face interaction. However, there are two main points to keep in mind:

1. Precondition #2 is only violated if you send the first message.

2. You can violate Precondition #2 on an online dating platform and still successfully execute and complete the IRAE process.

Because of the nature of online dating platforms, there is no way to contact a target directly and remain covert regarding your intentions. It's simply not possible. While you can slide around the fact if they send you the first message, it's a sad statistic that more than 99% of first messages sent through dating sites are from males to females.

This means that you will have to be quite direct in your approach (it's inevitable due to the nature of online dating platforms), and yet success will still be within your reach. We'll show you how.

Next, let's look at what's inside the ODP.

ODP: What's Under The Hood

There are two main components you need to successfully execute the IRAE Model in an online dating environment:

1. A great profile, and
2. Superior messaging.

It's as simple as that. No need to overcomplicate things at all. Nail these two things and you're golden.

Now some people wrongly believe that certain dating sites have specific 'hacks' which can be exploited to maximize their exposure. For example, some Tinder users use an app which automatically swipes right on everyone. Likewise, some OKCupid users lie about themselves to appear higher in the search results.

Like any "trick" or "loophole", it won't lead to anything substantial, and will just hamstring you in the long run. Also, you can't rely on these things to get women interested in you legitimately.

So, don't waste your time. Instead, focus on the two things which will yield long-term results: a powerfully engaging profile, and messages powered by Shogun Method scripts and Sequences.

With this in mind, the ODP is structured along these two components: profile development, and messaging.

- In the Profile Development Module, you will learn how to craft the perfect dating profile using a combination of interesting photographs and the most effective Shogun Method lines littered subtly in your profile bio.

- In the Messaging Module, you will learn how to execute the Intrigue and Rapport stages through an online dating medium using tried-and-tested Shogun Method techniques which have been adapted for online usage. It would be useful to familiarize yourself with the Intrigue Black Book, Texting On Steroids and Dark Rapport as many techniques outlined in these programs will come up frequently.

Your method of attack would be the following five steps:

1. Create an effective profile on your dating site of choice.

2. Use Intrigue scripts on as many potential targets as possible.

3. Use VAKSOG techniques to determine your target's sensory modes.

4. Use this knowledge to transition smoothly into Rapport.

5. Progress to meeting up to carry out Attraction and Enslavement, reaching your End Point.

As you'll see, the ODP strategy is largely platform-agnostic – which means that it doesn't matter what platform you use; the method will still work tremendously well. Platforms and sites come and go – but like Shogun Method, a superior strategy works great forever

Profile Development Strategy

One of the core principles of Shogun Method is the concept of "Linear Progression".

This is encapsulated in the IRAE Model[4]: a representation of how the process of attraction works - in a straight line. The progress is linear and in incremental steps: first, Intrigue generation, followed by Rapport creation, and then Attraction development, and finally, Enslavement.

[4] The IRAE Model is the "chassis" of Shogun Method which is foundational to everything we teach. The complete IRAE Model guide is here.

The VCEA Model

It's useful to think of the online dating process within the context of "Linear Progression":

- Step 1: VISIBILITY – Your profile must be seen.
- Step 2: CLICKTHROUGH – Your profile must be clicked after seen.
- Step 3: ENGAGEMENT - Your profile must be read.
- Step 4: ACTION – She must respond to you after reading the profile.

Think of this as the "IRAE Model" equivalent for online dating. The "VCEA Model" if you like – Visibility, Clickthrough, Engagement, Action.

When there's no Visibility, your profile won't get Clicks.

When your profile doesn't get Clicks, no woman will "Engage" with it.

When there's no Engagement, you won't get messages from women ("Action").

Let's start with the first step: Visibility.

Visibility Optimization

In the Visibility stage, ideally your profile should appear on top whenever a woman performs a search on an online dating service.

Some online dating guides have certain tips on increasing visibility like:

Update your profile frequently, and especially on Friday, at 12.01am!

Pay for inclusion of your profile in the daily emails, it's worth it!

Add "A" to your profile title because search results are sorted in alphabetical order!

My advice: don't sweat it.

"Gaming" online dating platforms is hardly worth it because of these reasons:

1. It's a zero sum game: whatever you know, almost everybody else will know, too. Since this knowledge is public, you won't have an edge.

2. Platforms change all the time – what works today may well be obsolete tomorrow.

3. It's more productive to focus on optimizing your profile than to rely on short-term tricks of dubious efficacy.

Remember: it's in the platform's interest (and long-term viability) to rank the best profiles at the top of search results. Spend your time working on your profile and over time, you WILL be highly visible. The cream will always rise to the top!

Clickthrough Optimization

Think about when you're browsing other people's online dating profiles. What is it which attracts your attention to a profile?

The answer: profile pictures.

Inevitably, a person's photos are the first thing you'll see, 100% of the time, right?

Assuming that you have a quality profile, you'll get rewarded by visibility over time. Therefore, the first thing that you must work on to get clicks is your picture.

It doesn't make a difference how good your headline, your biography or your information is. If your pictures aren't attention-grabbing, then your profile is going to be completely overlooked.

Profile Pictures As Intrigue Pings

Think about this for a second. How you would capture someone's attention under normal circumstances? If you had just approached a girl in a bar, what's the first thing you'd say?

If you've understood the core Shogun Method principles completely, you'd know the answer – an Intrigue Ping.

You need to say something which makes her stop in her tracks and pay attention to you. Intrigue Pings do this for you.

You'll therefore need to think of your pictures as "Intrigue Pings". Everything you already know about Intrigue Pings will apply when it comes to selecting appropriate pictures for your profile.

How To Choose Intriguing Pictures

The important keyword here is intrigue. You are not looking to generate an immediate sexual response from her. That would be cheap and goes completely against Shogun Method philosophy.

With Shogun Method, you don't have to look like Tom Hardy or have the body of a Greek God to appear desirable to your target. The modus operandi is this:

First, appeal to her subconscious first, and then gradually progress to sexual attraction.

For now, all you need to do with your pictures is to intrigue her subconscious – so that you get the click to your profile.

A recent study of dating site profile pictures found that there are three 'common' types of profile picture within the straight male demographic. These are:

1. Explicit photographs (shirtless, naked)

2. Generic photographs (a face and upper body shot with no interesting background in sight)

3. Engaging photographs (a shot of the person partaking in an activity or at a scenic location)

The study also researched which ones women were most likely to contact. Can you guess which one garnered the most attention?

Of course, it was the third.

With engaging photos, women are more likely to message because there's an immediate sense of intrigue about the photo. It isn't just a picture of a person, it's a snapshot of a story.

As the common cliché goes: a picture is worth a thousand words, and guess what? It's true. Well, when guys take shirtless pictures or bland selfies, they're not saying a thousand words at all. They're barely saying seven words. All these types of pictures say is: 'this is me… and I'm fucking vain'.

However, with an engaging photo, you're subtly showing a potential target a small portion of a story of which you can later fill in the blanks. It tells your target that there's much more to your character than a basic photograph could ever capture, and will make you stand out from your competition.

(As a side note, it's important to mention that the type of photographs which received the least attention were overtly sexual photographs. Avoid shirtless or revealing photos entirely).

What's An "Engaging" Picture?

So, what exactly is an engaging picture anyway?

Here's some Shogun Method 101 for you - Intrigue is the entry point in every interaction you'll ever have with a woman. Fittingly, it's the first stage of the IRAE Model.

You generate intrigue using conversational devices known as Intrigue Stories. And one of the crucial aspects of an Intrigue Story is that you are the central character.

Now, it's already been established that you are central to this story, as it's your profile she's viewing. Therefore, you need your surroundings to tell the story for you.

Bearing all that in mind, an engaging photo would be any of the following three types:

1. You addressing an audience (leading a meeting, speaking on stage, delivering a best man speech)

2. You partaking in something adventurous (mountain climbing, water rafting, bungee jumping)

3. You at an interesting landmark (ideally somewhere remote or exotic - Taj Mahal, Machu Picchu, Eiffel Tower, Kinkaku Ji)

Makes sense, rght?

Now, this type of shot should always be your profile picture. It shows that you're a well-rounded person who can teach a woman a few things she might not be familiar with.

However, when it comes to your other pictures, employ a combination of generic photos and engaging ones. It's perfectly fine to have one or two 'normal' photographs which show your face and your body (with clothes on!). You still want your target to get an idea of what you look like in various, everyday situations. However, your main profile picture should always be of you engaging in something interesting.

The magic number for pictures is around three to four. Any more and you will run the risk of giving too much away. Any less and it might come across as though you're unwilling to show what you really look like.

(Of course, this point is moot when it comes to Facebook.)

Delivering The Promise & Living Up To The Hype

First and foremost, when it comes to these general photos, it's important to be truthful.

It's good to be realistic, because remember: your end goal is to meet up with your target in person. The photographic you needs to match the real you.

As such, forget about filters and forget about hiding your imperfections. There's nothing wrong with portraying the best version of you possible, but ensure that your photographs aren't worlds apart from your true self.

If you've gained a few pounds over the years, don't put up a photograph of yourself from three years ago. If you have a great picture of yourself from last year but your hair is completely different, don't use it.

If you meet up with a girl and you look nothing like your photographs, the first thing she's going to think is that you're a liar, and that's a hurdle you don't need in your way. It's much more beneficial to be honest about your appearance and have successful dates than it is to deceive and have mediocre dates.

With Shogun Method, you don't need to look like a Hollywood heartthrob to win any woman over. You don't even need to pretend to because you'll have something else that will do the magic for you: Mind Control.

Engagement Optimization

Once you've employed the element of Intrigue in your pictures to capture the attention of any potential target, the next step is to keep her engaged with your profile.

This is where you'll come across the standard Shogun Method techniques that you are already familiar with. The female psychology tactics that serve you so well will now help you retain the attention of any woman who views your profile, and translate that attention into action next.

You may have seen the numerous 'stock' Intrigue Pings inside the Shogun Method knowledge base (either inside the Intrigue module of the core Shogun Method program, or the Intrigue Black Book). However, as any good practitioner knows, the most effective Intrigue Pings are *situational. This means you will use what's going on around you to craft the best Intrigue Pings.

Here's the catch, though…

When it comes to people viewing your dating profile, there is no situational aspect to exploit.

Therefore, you must use the dating profile itself as your situation. In the Intrigue Black Book, you learned how to text Intrigue Pings whilst using the text message itself as the context. This is very similar.

Now, some dating websites will ask for a 'headline'– a section where you must sell yourself in around fifteen words or less. The importance of a good headline can't be overstated. It's vital that your headline grabs your reader's attention and makes them click on your profile. This is where a few core Shogun Method tactics will come into play.

How To Craft The Perfect Headline

Here's what we have covered so far:

You're going to use Intrigue Pings to attract (and retain) attention. And you're going to use the dating site itself as the context.

Here's an example of how an Intrigue Ping would play out in an everyday, face-to-face circumstance:

You: "I want you to ask yourself something…"

Her: "What's that?"

You: "Aren't you sick of meeting average guys?"

If you were going to adapt this into a headline for your profile, you need to break it down into as few words as possible while still retaining the overall message. It would read something like this:

"Ask yourself something… are you sick of meeting average guys?"

A lot of guys on dating sites will use headers like "fun, outgoing, good-looking guy" or "looking for a woman who likes movies and eating out". Do you think these headlines would grab anyone's attention?

Of course not. These kinds of statements are boring, mundane and reeks of desperation.

By comparison, an Intrigue Ping-based headline works well because it appeals directly to the woman's innate, subconscious needs. And the fact it's a question will make her feel as though you're addressing her personally. It will make her stop, think and click.

To crafting your own headline, therefore, follow these two simple steps:

- Step #1: Imagine a real, face-to-face Intrigue Ping. (Use material from Shogun Method, or even better – something you've tried and tested in real life that works)

- Step #2: Mold that into a headline.

Here are some example scripts to give you some ideas:

- "I need to know something… are you an adventurous type?"

- "Answer this question right now… ever feel like life is slipping you by?"

- "Will you look into your heart… and finally embrace what you truly desire?"

- "Stop scrolling for a second… are you the woman who can tame me?

How To Use "Yes Ladders" To Optimize Engagement

The dating site of your choice may not have the option for you to insert a headline. Or, you may be using Facebook. In both cases, you can still use the headline that you have developed in the previous section as the opening line of your profile copy.

So, what do you fill the rest of your profile with?

With powerful, engaging copy that "persuades" the reader to act (i.e. contact you), of course. Next, you'll learn a simple technique that will do this.

First, note the four example headline scripts in the previous section. Notice that (1) every one of those headlines is a question, and (2) the default answer to each of those questions is "yes".

Of course, we are talking about the concept of "Yes Ladders"[5] here. If you are not familiar with this phenomenon, here's a quick breakdown:

A Yes Ladder is a series of statements in which the answer to the first few is always a 100% 'yes'.

Here's how the Yes Ladder technique works:

1. You begin by making general statements in which the answer cannot be refuted, establishing a chain of agreement in your target.

[5] Yes Ladders are covered fully inside the second module of the second volume of the Shogun Method Black Book.

2. This forces her subconscious mind to see you as a trustworthy source of information (for the sake of consistency since she repeatedly agrees with you).

3. Finally, you introduce statements which are a little more interpretative, and she will continue to agree with whatever you say to stay consistent.

Yes Ladders are used heavily in business because the technique "forces" the prospective customer to read advertising copy and take desired action (i.e. buy the product). Similarly, you will use Yes Ladders to "force" a woman to read your profile in full and be persuaded to message you.

It's a very simple idea which, now you know how it works, will make you realize that you've seen it a million times before (newspapers, advertisements, TV commercials).

Next, let's see how you can incorporate Yes Ladders in your online profile.

Online Yes Ladders In Action

Recall that your headline (or opening line) will already force your first 'yes' from your potential target. So, from here on, you need to start out with some general statements that you know are true.

Now, let's look at some of these general statements.

Firstly, if a woman is browsing your profile, it's safe to assume that she's already interested in you somewhat. This is valuable information which you can use to craft a general statement which is agreeable to her.

"Ask yourself… Did something about me grab your attention?" (general statement)

"Are you searching for that one guy who you can instantly connect with? The kind of guy who will bring out the best in you?" (general statement)

"Do you want to finally get away from online dating and meet someone REAL?" (general statement)

Now, after three general statements, you can insert a couple of "assuming statements" that are still relatively easy to agree with.

"Is it because you're sick of meeting up with guys who just let you down? Guys who you think are going to be your soulmate and then… disappointment?" (assuming statement)

"Sure, this might sound like a bold statement, but if you're looking at my profile, you're probably thinking I could be your perfect guy, right?" (assuming statement)

Notice how these questions have gradually progressed from a definite 'yes' to more interpretive answers.

With the "Yes Ladder" is in place, you finally want to attach a statement which is completely subjective, but one she will be forced to comply with.

"So, you want to chat with a guy who's confident, experienced and adventurous, yes? And you think you can keep up with me, right?" (call to action statement)

"Well, try your best. Bring it on. Send me a message now." (call to action statement)

See how this approach completely differs from the usual online profiles? Would a woman be much more likely to respond to this than "I like movies, going to the gym and eating out"? You bet!

Now, this isn't to say you can't insert things in your bio which describe your likes and dislikes. That's not what I mean at all.

In fact, between these Yes Ladder statements, you could write about a few things you like to give your target an idea of who you are. However, remember to keep it brief. You don't want to play all your cards straight away. Being a little mysterious will work wonders for you.

You might notice that the final line of the profile example above isn't a typical Yes Ladder statement. It's something of a challenge. This is a riff of the REPEL technique[6] to compel her to finally take action and message you (Step 4 in the VCEA Model).

Here are three more of these "repel statements":

- "Message me if you think you can handle it."
- "Don't message me if you can't keep up."
- "Drop me a line if you're up to the challenge."

Continuous Profile Optimization

Here's what our most motivated (and successful!) Shogun Method practitioners do:

Test, test, and test some more!

Online dating platforms have a clear advantage over "offline" dating – it's a fantastic way to figure out the best routines, statements and Intrigue Pings to use on the women you want to attract.

Think of these platforms as "testing beds" for you to experiment on the multiple components of your online dating campaign:

1. Pictures
2. Headlines / Intrigue Pings
3. "Yes Ladder" General Statements
4. Assuming Statements
5. Call To Action Statements

Through repeated testing, you can narrow down the most effective components (which you can then combine to get an optimized profile).

And once you have in possession this "optimized profile", all you need to do is to repost this asset (on the same platform, or on a different platform), and watch the messages fly in!🤑

Online Messaging Strategy

ere's one of the most important Shogun Method ground rules ever: you establish the first contact with a woman with an Intrigue Ping. This is true whether you've found her online, or you're seeing her in person.

In fact, this rule is especially important on an online dating platform because of this one reason:

It's easier to reject a man's advances online.

In person, a woman would need to make an excuse to move away from you. Online, all she needs to do is click a button.

Therefore, if your first message doesn't capture a woman's attention sufficiently, your chances with her will quickly drop to zero.

Recall the linear progression model that we have discussed in the previous module: everything builds up in a straight line. The first message represents the single point of failure on the straight line of attraction – if it tanks, it's pretty much game over for you. Therefore, spend the time and effort to really master the art of crafting the perfect first message!

Online Messaging Is All About Intrigue (And Some Rapport)

If there's any point in the IRAE Model which online messaging is most advantageous, it's the Intrigue stage.

There's something important about Intrigue that you must understand, and it's this…

You cannot "overdo" Intrigue.

Too much Rapport (especially the wrong kind – Contextual Rapport) leads to the friend zone.

Too much Attraction may lead to relationship burnout… especially if there's no escalation to the Enslavement stage.

Too much Enslavement results in the creation of an overly-submissive woman which is problematic and emotionally unhealthy.

And yet guess what? There's no such thing as *"too much Intrigue".

Until you've progressed to having "natural" conversations with her (i.e. the start of the Rapport stage), you will be relying on your Intrigue generation skills to capture her attention. Therefore, it's advantageous for you to really lay the Intrigue on thick right off the bat.

How To Craft Your First Message

Online Intrigue Pings follow the same format as standard and texted Intrigue Pings -

[Statement / Response / Question]

This has been covered in the previous module, and so here's a quick recap:

Situational Intrigue Pings work much better than 'stock' Intrigue Pings.

In this case, you'll make your Intrigue Pings situational by using the online dating environment as your context.

Imagine for a second that you've received a notification that a woman has viewed your profile. However, no message has come through. This is the context you would then address.

For example:

You: "Don't think of me as arrogant, but you've got me thinking about something…"

At this point, you must wait for her reply. Do not send her the entire Intrigue Ping as one message otherwise the effect will be hindered.

Eventually, she will reply with something like:

Her: "What's that?"

You: "At what point would you stop what you're doing and message me?"

The reason you must wait for her response (or, "bait" her into responding to you) is so that her subconscious tells her that you're worth talking to. You want her to be involved in the conversation, don't just talk at her. Once she's involved herself, her subconscious will tell her that you are worth talking to.

Here are a few more first message ideas:

You: "There's something on my mind, and I think only you can answer it."

Her: "Sure. What is it?"

You: "How long it would take for you to reply to my message? Congratulations, you surpassed all my expectations."

Here's another:

You: "I know something about you. In fact, I think it's pretty obvious."

Her: "Oh really? What?"

You: "You've been looking at my profile and considered messaging me, but didn't quite know what to say, right?"

How To Escalate To Rapport Stage Online

Remember the End Goal of your Intrigue Pings - escalation to Rapport stage.

Here's a common question that we get from our Shogun Method clients:

"Online, how long does it take to escalate to Rapport stage?"

The answer: it depends on your target, and her comfort levels with you. And to make things a little trickier, calibration is difficult online because you're not there physically with her (checking non-verbal cues are essential for accurate calibration).

Here's a potential pitfall that you mustn't fall into…

Rookie Shogun Method students make the mistake of forcing natural conversation in their attempts to escalate quickly to Rapport stage. This is problematic because:

1. You risk not having built enough Intrigue, and

2. You're making the fake familiarity mistake which is a Rapport killer.

(Likewise, you won't want to simply ask her a million questions at once. Nothing will make a woman run away quicker than a huge wall of text.)

An online conversation which flows naturally and freely is the biggest indicator that you have entered Rapport territory.

Remember that progressing through Rapport involves the use of subtle body language and micro-signals, which are impossible to display through online, texted communication. Therefore, we will need to adapt the techniques somewhat.

The two techniques we will use to ramp up your Desirability levels in the Rapport stage are:

- Multiple Outs, and
- VAKSOG theory.

Let's first start with the Multiple Outs technique, and how to use it online to build Rapport.

How To Use Multiple Outs To Build Online Rapport

A 'Multiple Out' is a principle originated in the mentalism and magic community.

As part of his act, the mentalist's or magician's guess can never be incorrect so that his reputation is intact. This is achieved using a very carefully-worded statement.

Imagine saying this to a potential target:

"Not going to the bar tonight, are you?"

Play that sentence over and over in your head until it clicks.

Eventually, you will begin to see the double meaning due to the way our brains process colloquial language. Due to the casual nature of how the comment is presented, it can either mean:

- "You AREN'T going to the bar tonight, are you?"

- "Do you happen to be going to the bar tonight?"

Therefore, whatever your target's answer is (yes or no), you will be right.

Why is this important?

Well, here's the answer. The easiest way to build Rapport with a woman (online AND offline) is to know what your target wants better than she does herself[7].

When she feels that you know more about her feelings, desires and needs than she does, then it means that you have rapport with her.

When done correctly, Multiple Out statements will allow her subconscious to see you as someone who already knows what she's looking for, and can, therefore, give her exactly what she wants.

Of course, there are no real "stock" Multiple Out statements which can be applied to any situation. Therefore, you will need to create some for yourself.

[7] For a comprehensive treatment of Multiple Outs, see the fourth chapter of the Shogun Method Black Book.

Here are three standard structures which you can use to create Multiple Out statements:

- "You're not…[X]… Are you?"

Example:

"You're not looking for anything short-term, are you?"

Here's another one –

- "It's not… [X]… Is it?"

Example:

"If I had to guess your favorite type of music… It's not rap, is it?"

Here's the third structure –

- "[X] hasn't [X], right?"

Example:

"Your ex-boyfriend hasn't made you hate dating, right?"

See what I mean? Your target could answer yes or no to any of these questions and you'd be able to retro-fit your statement as though you already knew the answer.

Here's an example:

You: "You're not looking for anything short-term, are you?"

- If she says yes: "I knew it. Same here."

- If she says no: "Didn't think so. It's pretty clear a girl like you needs a lot more than short-term satisfaction."

VAKSOG Techniques As Rapport Builder

VAKSOG is an acronym of the main six senses with which women process information:

- Visually (seeing)
- Aurally (hearing)
- Kinesthetically (acting out, doing)

- Somatosensory (touching)
- Olfactorily (smelling)
- Gustatorily (tasting)

Humans process information in fundamentally different ways.

For example, when you recall certain childhood memories, the first thing which might pop into your head are the voices or the sounds around you. However, when you mention the memory to a childhood friend, her might recall it somewhat differently. He might see certain faces or recognize their surroundings more vividly.

What does this mean? This: your primary senses are different from your friend's. Yours would be aurally, whereas his would be visually.

A person's "Primary VAKSOG Mode" is hard-wired into the his or her DNA. It's a matter of biology, and is fixed for a lifetime.

Now, how does this help you build rapport with a woman?

Here's how: you can "shortcut" your way to great rapport with a woman by "mimicking" the way she processes information.

By doing this, you'll trick a woman's subconscious mind into believing that she has developed strong emotional rapport with you… even if she has just met you online.

Why And How VAKSOG Mode Matching Works

From the core Shogun Method program, you've learned about this particular flaw inside the female mind:

While a woman may be skeptical about what you tell her, she will never doubt the conclusions that she makes on her own.

This has the following implications:

1. If you want a woman to believe something, NEVER tell her outright.

2. Instead, guide her covertly to come to the desired conclusions herself.

By matching her Primary VAKSOG Mode, you'll achieve

(2) rather easily because you'll be speaking to her the same way she is speaking to herself.

Here's some good news: VAKSOG Matching works tremendously well online. In fact, it's one of the handful of Shogun Method techniques which are equally effective even when used online (without face-to-face interaction.)

Additionally, you don't have to "think on your feet" at all – because you'll have all the time in the world to analyze her replies to you. It will also give you the opportunity to carefully craft your responses so that they match her Primary VAKSOG Mode perfectly.

How To Establish Her Primary VAKSOG Mode

To match a woman's Primary VAKSOG Mode, here's the first thing you need to do: find out what her Primary VAKSOG Mode is. And here's how to do that.

For a woman, the most common sensory processes are visual, aural and kinesthetic – in that order. With this in mind, you'll figure out her Primary VAKSOG Mode by looking at how she replies to your messages.

The simplest way to do this is to ask her why she likes something. Then, using her responses, gauge which VAKSOG Mode she most identifies with.

(Also note that while women may have more than one Primary VAKSOG Mode.)

Here's an example:

You: "I've never had the chance to go rock climbing. What is it about it you like so much?"

Her: "Well, there's something very primal about scaling something completely natural. When you're halfway up, there's a real adrenaline kick. It's terrifying, but I love it. I like to keep turning around to admire the view below. Then, when you reach the top, the skylines are incredible."

Notice how she's put emphasis on the act itself and the imagery which her hobby provides. From this, you can deduce that she processes information kinesthetically and visually.

Now you know this, you can personalize your response by matching her VAKSOG mode:

> You: "Looks like you have a real passion for it. I'd love to do it myself. I'd like to see if I could handle it. I can imagine that some of the views are amazing – especially if you're looking across at a sunset or a busy city. I bet you've seen some really cool stuff."

See how easy it is? Since you know her Primary VAKSOG response is visual, all you need to do is invoke visually-striking images (sunset, busy city) and use words with visual connotations (looks like, see, view).

How To Ask For A Date (And Get It)

Assuming you've done everything you learned in this program so far…

1. You've written an Intrigue-laden profile complete with engaging pictures
2. You've established a pattern of agreement with her using Yes Ladders
3. You've sent her a compelling first message which intrigues her into responding enthusiastically to you

4. You've built rapport with her with Multiple Outs and by matching her VAKSOG modes

…she'll soon be eating out of your hands. Believe it.

So far, so good, right? Herein lies the danger:

The longer you stay in Rapport stage, the likelier you'd be friend-zoned. This problem is more prevalent online (you'll be seen as an "Internet friend", nothing more.)

To sidestep this problem, here's what you should do instead:

Once you've established a Yes Ladder and uncovered her VAKSOG response, you want to set up a date with her.

And to do this, you're going to use a variation of a powerful Shogun Method tactic that you should already be familiar with - Implanted Commands.

How To Use Implanted Commands Online

You might be wondering: aren't Implanted Commands used in the Attraction stage?

That's correct. And here's why we are making a rare exception this time:

Employing Implanted Commands at this point (the end of Rapport stage) will plant the seeds of Attraction in her mind. Then, when you do meet up, she will be fully primed to start the Attraction stage with a bang.

Makes sense?

Now, understand that there's a big difference between a spoken Implanted Command and a texted Implanted Command[8]. Here's how the two differs from each other:

- A spoken Implanted Command will be said in its entirety without any pauses.

- A texted Implanted Command will be delivered in two parts.

[8] Online, you'll be using the texted variation of the Implanted Command.

The reason for this is that you must disguise the command part of the sentence in some way.

When delivered verbally, the casual nature of which the Implanted Command is delivered will make sure any 'command' goes undetected by her conscious mind.

However, when the same command is delivered by text online, it is very easy for the target to read the message multiple times, allowing her conscious mind to detect your manipulation.

Take the following Implanted Command for example:

"I don't really know if you would have the best date of your life with me, but it's a challenge I'd be willing to accept."

Online, the following works better:

"I don't really know if you would have the best date of your life with me, but…"

Parse.

"It's a challenge I'd be willing to accept."

As you've established a pattern of agreement already (using Yes Ladders), you simply need to insert the command that your target should agree to a date with you. This way, she won't be able to put up any resistance to your advances as her conscious mind won't be detecting them.

To get you started, refer to the list of 44 Implanted Commands in the core program[9] and adapt them to be used online. Some examples:

Example #1

- "You'll never know…
- "If you would have an amazing time with me this Friday [at the bar, restaurant, event, etc]"

Example #2

- "I wonder if you'd agree to meet me this weekend…"
- "And possibly have the best time of your life"

Example #3

- "Some women might refuse my offer of a date at first, but…
- "Something tells me you're not going to."

[9] http://shogunmethod.net/shogun-method/module-6/

Example #4

- "Someone once said that you miss every shot you don't take, so I'm wondering…
- "If you'll agree to meet me this weekend."

Example #5

- "I won't tell you to meet me this weekend, because…
- "You already know you're going to."

If you've ticked all the boxes above (developed intrigue, built ladder of agreement, created rapport without overdoing it, used Implanted Commands to ask for a date), then your chances of landing a date will be the highest they have ever been.

And when you do meet up in person, she will be fully primed ready you to jump right in at the Attraction stage and continue with the IRAE process until you reached Enslavement stage with her
